

College of Nursing-Fort Myers

Terry Ogilby, PhD, MSN, MPH, RN

I began my education at Edison State College. I obtained a BSN from USF. I also obtained a MSN and MPH from USF in Tampa. I received a PHD from Capella University in Health Care Administration.

I started in Med-Surg Nursing at Lee Memorial Hospital followed by Public Health. I had many roles including supervisor of Epidemiology, QA, and advanced up to the Nursing Director of the DeSoto County Health Dept. After 20+ years of public health, I decided to change my focus. Started teaching at Edison College as the Nursing Lab supervisor and after a few years, moved to NSU.

My main interest is public/community health. I am currently a co-investigator for a research study to identify student's perceptions of their clinical experience in rural and underserved community health centers. I started my career at NSU as an adjunct professor in the RN-BSN Program. We soon realized there was a need for another Entry Level-BSN Program in the Lee County area. I started that program and after two years, realized how much I missed the student contact and teaching. I am currently an Associate Professor teaching Community Health, Leadership and Business courses.
