Assistant Professor Sabrina Stern received her undergraduate degree (B.S) from The University of the state of New York, her Graduate Degree (M.S.N.) from the University of Phoenix. Post-graduate training in education at Nova Southeastern University, working towards a doctorate in education.

Initial exposure into the work world was as a candy striper which gave me the desire to progress in the nursing field. After obtaining licensure as an Emergency Medical Technician and Paramedic, I went on to the Registered Nursing educational track. Work experience included home health nursing as well as teaching home health aides and nursing assistants. I was a director/ manager for weight loss clinics and taught at the community college level, prior to coming on board with NSU.

My interests are varied. I enjoy reading for research as well as reading other topical material such as newspapers and magazines to keep up with current events. I have worked with the entry level program and have taught NUR 3000, Transition to Baccalaureate Nursing Education, NUR 3160, The Nurse as a Professional, NUR 3005, Mathematical Applications for Nursing Practice and NUR 3130 Foundations of Professional Nursing. I have also taught community health NUR 4150. My research focus is learning about the best practice applications of good teaching methods. Learning about best practice helps educators continue to refine their skills in the art and science of teaching. It is both a pleasure and an honor to be involved in preparing our next generation of nursing professionals. I began my work with NSU as an adjunct and progressed to a grant position. My background in business and sales led to being asked to market and recruit for the nursing program, which I did for many years. I am now full time faculty teaching in the entry level program at the Davie campus in the College of Nursing.
